ALIEN SHORES

STRANGE EVIDENCE

by Paul Counelis

When a new report surfaced some time ago in which American intelligence officials revealed that there was indeed some mystifying evidence of UFOS, millions of people sat up and took notice. Was it really what they had waited for? Were we about to receive some information that confirmed suspicions of alien life here on earth?

The answer was a resounding well, sort of.

They claim that no aliens have been proven to exist, and that may well be true, but with 143 confirmed reports of "unidentified aerial phenomena", who can count it out so easily? For decades there has been speculation about the existence of aliens (and of course, conspiracy theories about the government knowing that there ARE aliens), fueled not just by rumor or bizarre claims of eyewitness accounts and abductions, but by that strange, famous case in Roswell, New Mexico.

But what was revealed does little to take the case for aliens away from the public eye. In fact, some of the most fascinating stories of unidentified aircrafts come straight from the mouths of Naval pilots themselves.

There are multiple reports of strange objects moving through the skies with the type of speed and grace that has never before been captured as evidence. Several of the most alarming reports even claim that the crafts in question wound up flying purposely into the depths of the oceans.

So how much do we really know?

Taking it all even one step further is the purpose of wondering, and the idea that an alien craft would purposely crash into the water brings about a logical conclusion; or, at least, a thought. What if there are aliens who have gone SO deep into our oceans that they cannot be found, and are now living in their own underground civilization, like a bizarre version of Atlantis?

Probably not, right? But given what we know and what we do not know, is it really so strange?

Ok, of course it is. But what purpose would a spacecraft that is not of our earth have for going into the abyss of the ocean? Can it really be that whatever creatures are piloting those crafts feel more at home on the ocean floor, having some similarity to the settings of their own damp, colorless, planets and moons?

The speculation does not stop there, of course. Because there have been recent claims of images off the gulf coast of Florida that have revealed such odd occurrences as underwater landing strips and even more reports of objects rising from the ocean and resuming flight, albeit so quickly that the people who claim to have witnessed it are not even sure what it was that they saw.

Structures that many claim to have seen on images of Google Earth just off the Malibu coast lend a certain unusual flare to this theory, although it remains only a theory at this point in time. But could it be that there is an entire Lovecraftian gathering of alien life so far beneath the surface that we aren't even privy to how big these structures and alien bases really are? And if so, how long have they been there? Are they monitoring us? Are they allowing us small, quick investigations into their society via momentary captures on government videos?

Well, of course we just don't know. But maybe someone does. And on Halloween night, when you're out looking for tricks and treats, or when you've come back from that Halloween party, maybe you should stop and look to the skies...because, as we have heard, the night skies have a thousand eyes, and you never know who is watching.

"In our time the search for extraterrestrial life will eventually change our laws, our religions, our philosophies, our arts, our recreations, as well as our sciences. Space, the mirror, waits for life to come look for itself there."

----- Ray Bradbury
